PROBLEM OF CHILD

Vacation days bring again the prob-Declaring that they conspired to- lem of "keeping children off the streets." That this is a community responsibility is made clear in suggested standards for children's play published in "Standards of Child Welfare" by the children's bureau of the United States department of labor. These standards cover in detail the subject of organized recreation for city children only, but it is hoped that in the near future similar standards will be worked out for rural children, whose need for wholesome recreation and steward, he says, was cashier of a under intelligent leadership is as great as the need of city children.

The standards given declare that at least two hours of organized play every day throughout the year are necessary for every child. To insure this, there should be a playground within a quarter of a mile of every child under six years of age, one within half a mile of every child over six, and a baseball field not more than a mile distant from every boy old enough to play on a team. One acre to serve 500 children is advised as a minimum amount of space. This general playground should not be used for games requiring a great deal of space. Baseball, football, ten-
